

Facilitating for your learners: make yourself shine and your training stick!

Who's driving?

Liz Brumels

Director of Organizational Learning, Thrasher Group

Liz Brumels is on a mission to redefine learning and development at Thrasher Group. She is a talent development leader focused on encouraging and equipping others to follow their passion. Throughout her career, Liz has specialized in creating impactful talent development programs, leadership development, employee engagement, performance management, and career coaching. Liz holds a master's degree in Human Capital Management and is a Certified Professional in Talent Development (CPTD), and she is a past board member of ATD Nebraska. When she isn't working, she enjoys spending time with her husband, three sons, and ornery dog.

What sites should we expect to see?

Think about the best learning experience you've had. You're probably not thinking about the PowerPoint, the handouts, etc. You're thinking about the presenter! This interactive workshop will focus on tools and strategies you can use right away to be even more intentional when facilitating training. Understand how the adult brain learns and processes information and discover training techniques you can use to create great training experiences that improve learner retention and get better results. Learn how to make yourself shine and your training stick!

What will we learn along the way?

As a result of this workshop, learners should be able to:

- Understand the difference between teaching and facilitating
- Identify key adult learning principles and apply them to a project you are currently designing or delivering
- Recognize how the brain learns and how that impacts your facilitation approach
- Demonstrate facilitation best practices to enhance training experiences